The prevalence of food allergies continues to increase according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) with 4 to 6 percent of children and young adults having food allergies; an overall increase of nearly 20 percent between 1997 and 2007. Food allergies have become the most common cause of anaphylaxis, a sudden and severe allergic reaction that can be fatal. There is no cure for food allergies with strict avoidance of the allergen as the only way to prevent a life-threatening reaction.
